Dear Mr. Lake,

As a consumer, I read food labels. I avoid foods and additives that I believe will harm my children and myself. Recently, in St. Joseph, Mo., an employee at Taco Bell decided to add human excrement to the refried beans. Four people got very sick.

My point is this, if I can't trust fast food providers, then I will not buy their food. And, If you don't require genetically engineered foods be labeled as such, then I must boycott the supermarkets in favor of health food stores (and just hope that their suppliers are more honest than you). If people start getting sick, I just hope they remember your name for the lawsuits! Mark Juhl
